Ntima Ntima, a clinical fellow in anaesthetics and ICU, says: "Anaesthetists are the essential oil in the machinery of the NHS, but their work is often not recognised by patients and sometimes by doctors too." It is therefore surprising that anaesthetics takes up barely a week or two at medical school.

A career in anaesthesia | The BMJ

The surveys conducted 8-12 years ago 2, 9, 10 indicated that anaesthetists were much more likely than non-anaesthetists to use local anaesthesia for these procedures; moreover, a large majority of junior doctors had never used it for either venous cannulation or arterial puncture. The present results, though confined to routine use, indicate that little has changed.
