Die Casting machine is integrated inside ProCAST, enabling a real-time piston control and, hence, accurate selection of the right machine. Vacuum process, gas porosity - due to undissolved hydrogen, stresses in casting, stress release on die removal & part ejection, and die life - can all be predicted to reduce manufacturing costs and assess in-service part performance.

Solidification Analysis. Investment castings are used extensively to create parts with complex geometry from difficult to process materials. Properly designing the gating and runner system is the first step to ensuring that sound castings are produced and American Casting has taken this to the next level.

Simulation and Solidification Analysis of Investment Castings

and finally solidification inside the die. The commercial casting simulation suite ProCAST was used to simulate the whole process. The CAD models for the casting volume, the shot sleeve, the fixed/mobile dies and the shot piston were built and assembled in VisualMesh[11]. A finite element (FE) mesh was
