The spread of an infection is determined by the anatomy of the anorectal region. There are five anatomic spaces into which an infection can spread (Figure 110-3). 5 The perianal space is located at the area of the anal verge. The ischiorectal space, which is continuous with the perianal space, extends from the levator ani muscle to the perineum.

The toenail usually does not grow into the soft tissue. Instead, the soft tissue overgrows and obliterates the nail sulcus in response to external pressure and irritation. 1-5 The toenail itself is usually normal, although some older patients may have incurved nails. The causes of an ingrown toenail are multiple and include trimming the toenails too short, using sharp tools to clean the ...
